Career Development and New Promotion Guidelines for Teaching-Intensive Faculty

Session Description:
Brian R. Smith MD is Chair of the Department of Laboratory Medicine at the Yale School of Medicine and Professor of Laboratory Medicine, Biomedical Engineering, Internal Medicine and Pediatrics at Yale University. He is also the Chief of Laboratory Medicine at Yale New Haven Hospital. In addition to his clinical work, Dr. Smith chaired of the School’s Committee on the Clinician Educator Track. This committee was formed to recommend innovations to the clinician educator track to attract, retain, and appropriately recognize CE faculty. In this interactive session, Dr. Smith will provide an overview of the final recommendations from this committee that specifically address the unique needs of our teaching faculty. Dr. Hafler will highlight components of educational scholarship.

Learning Objectives:
1. Describe the components of the track for teaching-intensive faculty
2. Discuss how to evaluate the educational contributions of teaching-intensive faculty.
